An Injustice Righted

By OSCAR COX

There is a region in Mississippi that is occupied almost exclusively by colored people. In the interior of this region the only way to dispense justice has at times been for the negroes themselves to organize a court and try some case of such importance as seem ed to demand attention. As for small breaches of the law, such as stealing chickens, watermelons and the like. the individuals dispossessed were expected to attend to the matter them-

One day a gentleman from Vicksburg, who was traveling through this region, had occasion to speak with a certain colored man and was told that he was sitting in a woodshed conducting a murder trial. Going to the humble courtroom, the visitor looked in and saw the court in session. Tak-

Caesar Henderson, black as coal was on trial for the murder of Tecumseh Rodman, a rival for the affections of Dinah Ochiltree. The rivals had visited Dinah during the evening before the murder and had left together. They were heard quarreling on the road. The next morning Tecumseh was missing. Since he did not turn up for some days Caesar was accused of his murder, and, there being no regular court within many miles, he was tried by his peers in the woodshed. Dinah, the object of contention, was being questioned by the judge, who siso acted as counsel for the state and the defense. He was also the twelve jurymen.

"Dinah." he said severely, "wha' fo' yo' hab two lubbers hangin' roun' yo'. persuadin' 'em to fight to' yo'? Don' yo' know dat wo'se'n murder?" "I couldn't help dey fightin' fo' me.

replied Dinah, with a toss of her head. "Wha' time did dey leab yo' dat night when Caesar killed Tecumseh?" "I didn't kill Tecumseh." protested Caesar. "Shet up." cried the judge, glaring convict and sentence him at the same time. He was to be taken out to "de ole tree wid de low branch convenient fo' hangin' pussons" and hanged by the neck until he was "daid."

The sentence roused Dinah's ire. "Wha' fo' yo' gwine hang Caesar, judge?" she shouted. "Dah ain't no sinse in dat. At de dark ob de moon I hab two lubbers to choose from. One killed de udder, and now yo' gwine to hang de one lef. Whar do I come in?"

At the statement of this obvious injustice the judge scratched his wool. "I's might' sorry bout dat. Dinah. But it's too late now. I done sentence de prisoner." There was a babel of tongues, some insisting that, a sentence having been pronounced, there was no going back on it. Others claimed that it was mighty hard on Dinah. The hubbub was quieted by the gentleman observer. who stepped to the front and said: "Your bonor, I am an attorney in Vicksburg, and if you will listen to me I think I can tell you how the prisoner can be legally saved from the gallows," Every eye was turned to the white man, who continued as follows: "We derive our laws from England An English king, Edward II an edict that when a man was sentenced to be hanged for any crime, if I woman could be found to marry him, he should go free. According to this law, which we have inherited from England, if Dinah will marry Caesar he will escape the gallows." There was nothing in the learned speech that the darkles understood until the speaker came to the last ten words; then a shout arose, and the pair were forthwith united in marriage.

Rule of the Corset.

If Cleopatra wore corsets she may rank as a royal champion of them with Catherine de' Medici, who is credited with having introduced the busked corset in France from Italy. Male monarchs have been less friendly. Joseph II. of Austria tried to discourage the corsef by making it part of the costume of a convicted woman of bad character. Napoleon, shaking his head over the tight lacing of his day, told Dr. Corvisart that he saw in it a sign of frivolous tastes and a menace of coming decadence. The restoration kings, Louis XVIII. and Charles X., were equally bostlie. Formerly, said the latter, France had been full of Venuses, Dianas and Niobes, but now there were only wasps. The revolution alone temporarly put down the garment that has triumphantly defied kings.-London Spectator.
